Adam was welcomed into this world by his forever supportive parents, Tom (and JoAnn) Underberg of Carroll, IA and Vicki (and Ben) Gross of Breda, IA; 48 years ago. He grew up with two loving sisters, Christie Underberg, who pre-deceased him in 2017, and Roxie Underberg. He also had a brother, Robert Underberg, who died in infancy.

In his early years into adulthood, Adam welcomed his son, Blake Toms into his life, who he reflected on daily, even though their lives had taken them in different directions in his early years.

Then came Isabella (Bella Underberg), his daughter of 14 who he cherishes and whose connection could not be a better example of the love that a parent has for their child, and child has in return.

Adam has also been a Brother and Uncle to his extended family, which includes a number of Step-Siblings and numerous nieces and nephews across Iowa.

Adam leaves behind his blessed life on the Harbor in Bettendorf, Iowa - where he and his adoring "wife", Amy (Beauchamp) have made their home, surrounded by an amazing community of friends and colleagues.

Adam's kindness, willingness to help literally anyone, and his gifted ability to connect with others on a multitude of levels are what built the memories that will live on.

To the daughter of Adam, Bella, who he is survived by. You are such a kind, bright, adventurous soul. Everything about you when we hang out is fun and you're always full of the best ideas. You never let stuff bring you down and when we're together you always seem to find ways to be positive and push through things. I don't expect you to be able to push through this alone. May your family and friends as well as me help you to give you to return the light that God had to take too soon from you. Remember, its not how he died. Its how your father lived. You can do this. The only way to combat greif is to grieve. So don't let this ruin you. He will always be here even if hes no longer alive. He's alive in our memories, our hearts, The little things he's left behind. And even you Bella. He's alive in you. Love you.
